The reliability and validity of the Hebrew Version of the Geriatric Depression Scale for the

---

Persian Elderly.

Depression is an important geriatric syndrome, associated with overall health deterioration, impaired quality of life, morbidity and mortality in older people. The Geriatric Depression Scale (GDS) is a 30-item self-report instrument designed to measure depression. The most extensive and accurate study carried out with the GDS in Iranian older people was carried out by Ghali et al. to confirm the validity and reliability of the scale. This study re-investigated the reliability and validity of the translated scale to verify its suitability for Persian use and for further research in Iranian older people. Data were collected from a convenience sample of 400 older people (200 men, 200 women) aged 60 years or older attending a geriatric health care center in Mazandaran, Iran. The GDS was re-translated into Persian using translation and back-translation techniques. The Persian GDS was then given to 300 persons randomly selected from the sample to examine its reliability and validity.

Finally, 110 elderly people were recruited from the geriatric care center using convenience sampling. The internal consistency reliability and construct validity of the Persian GDS were calculated using Cronbach's alpha coefficient ( $\alpha$ ) and the Pearson product moment correlation coefficient ( $r$ ) respectively. Results showed a high internal
